YATTO HAPPENINGS

State Road Makers Fail to Replace Watering Troughs-Leave Drive-ways, Etc., Unfinished.

In repairing the roads the water troughs have been neglected and in some places abandoned. Probably it is because the auto has supplanted the horse on long distance trips; but there are still a few horses that have to travel long distances. There is no watering trough between the Norwich Town trought and a point beyond the Lebanon station. The barrels at Smith's corner are in poor condition and the fine trough across from Newman's is no more.

The roads in Franklin are in fine condition, hard and in some places piled. The state has put in a few concrete steps leading to houses where the road was cut down, also retaining walls of stone have been provided for ome driveways; but the way the town chool property is neglected attracts onsiderable notice.

ations will not work in this peripe tresults from this recipe and in the southern end of the town the Sodom school grounds have been completely cut away, having bardly twelve feet frontsge. The bank that is left is continually washing into the gutter, and the roots of a young cim are exposed.

POETRY

TO THE UNKNOWN HERO.

What country claims thee for her own. opic sun shine on thy natal Or didst thou wake in some cold, cheefloss region.

'Neath winter snows, and skies of sombre gray?

Were thy first years spent cless to Nature's bosom,
Or mid the clamor of the world's gay throng?

Did mountain breezes soothe thy childhood's slumber,
Or ocean billows sing thy cradle song?

Lover of mine, and shall I ever meet thee?
Ever see the love-light in thine eyes?
Say, canst thou hear though seas
And wilt thou come in answer to my sighs?
Would that mine eyes might see thee
where thou toilest,
In field or forest, or on stormy see.
Is there no kindly breeze to bear my message. And find thee out, and whisper it to Perchance, dear love, I have already seen thee, Have looked on thy face and lightly turned away;

Nor even dreamed that thou wert my heart's comrade;
Nor marked on Memory's chart that factul day.
But wheresoever thou may'st be, Beloved,
Know I am ever walting here for thee;
And hoping still that thou will hear me calling,
And come from out the great Unknown to me!

That the grandmothers, gentle and gray,
With their silver-bowed speciacles, aprons and caps.
Have utterly vanished away.
In their places are well-presedved matrons in styles.
Distressingly giddy and new,
With tresses that show not a glimmer of snow—
But where are the grandfathers, toof The kindly old man with their garru-Who delighted to doze by the hearth,
The honest old fellows with wrinkles
and pipes,
White-bearded, the salt of the earth.
There are plenty of bald-headed sports
with cigars.
Auto cars, and fur costs, it is true.
But while we lament for the grandmothers gone.
Oh! where are the grandfathers,
too?
